Depending on the system being utilized, the customer service representative may be able to respond to the customer immediately, or they may forward the call to other employees for some type of human intervention. In these situations, the customer service representative needs to provide some type of status indication regarding the call to other call center employees. Currently, most human operators utilize the following processes to work the call: 1. The operator is informed of the incoming call. 2. The operator is given the dialed number from the caller. 3. The caller is announced. 4. The operator provides as much information as possible regarding the call. 5. The call is transferred to another operator. 6. The incoming call is passed to an agent (i.e. the call is placed onto a waiting queue). 7. The agent interacts with the caller. 8. The agent informs the operator of the results of the call. 9. The agent finishes the call, or the call is transferred to an agent. There are several problems with the above processes. The processes may not be sufficiently reliable to ensure complete customer satisfaction, and they are prone to human error. For example, the operator may not be adequately informed of the situation, the operator may mishear the number, or the operator may be busy and unable to give the caller any information or follow-up instructions. Also, the operator may not have sufficient information available in a timely manner to pass on to another operator. In some situations, for example where the agent is able to speak to the caller before the operator arrives, the agent may not have sufficient information in a timely manner to forward the call to another operator. have been apprehended under this Act," he said. Children are more prone than adults to an increase in number, duration, and severity of migraine. In this review, we analyzed the evolution of migraine by studying the natural history of clinical traits, as well as laboratory and imaging findings, as these are more prevalent in children than adults. Migraine evolution in children is different from what is observed in adults, particularly in the course of aura symptoms. In addition, in children, migraine frequently evolves to less common migraine types, such as with cluster headaches and trigeminal autonomic cephalgias. However, the course of migraine during childhood is variable and can be influenced by several factors. These include genetic and environmental factors, as well as the age at migraine onset, comorbidities, and the development of treatment interventions.Q: Change background colour in colorbox How do i change the background colour of colorbox? I am using the colorbox() function and i want to change the light grey background to something different... (just as an example) $("a[rel='example']").colorbox({inline:true, overlayClose:true, opacity:0.8, href:"#myDiv1", title: 'Test' }); Any ideas on how to do this? A: I've never used colorbox so I can't confirm this, but perhaps if you modify the overlayColor (or what colorbox calls it) property: $("a[rel='example']").colorbox({inline:true, overlayClose:true, opacity:0.8, href:"#myDiv1", title: 'Test', overlayColor: "black", overlayImage: "images/colorbox/blank.png"}); Hesperidin sensitizes cell viability and induces the production of reactive oxygen species and apoptosis in human lung adenocarc 3e33713323
